

THE ANU COLLEGE OF LAW PRESENTS
A FREE PUBLIC EVENT:

International Environmental Law Symposium

Towards Rio+ 20: Contemporary Issues in International Environmental Law

SATURDAY, 28 MAY 2011

Organised by Students in the 2011 Course on International Environmental Law

The ANU students of International Environmental Law, in conjunction with the ANU Environmental Law Students' Society, invite you to join their inaugural Symposium on 28 May at the ANU College of Law. Come and share student ideas and hear from some of Australia's best thinkers in the field of international environmental law.

In light of pressing global environmental problems -- from climate related disasters to international food security threats -- our Symposium will put International Environmental Law at the forefront of legal discourse.

In the lead up to the twentieth anniversary of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development our Symposium will bring together a broad range of experience, insight, and fresh new energy to tackle key legal problems facing the global environment. In a variety of plenary sessions, and 'breakout' workshop sessions internationally recognised academics as well as ANU students will discuss their original research.

We look forward to welcoming you to Canberra and the ANU College of Law.

RSVP and enquiries by email: anuintenvlaw@hotmail.com

Please forward this email to your lists and to those who may be interested.

Views expressed in this Symposium are those of the presenters and do not necessarily represent the views of The ANU.
