

Feast on the International Law of Food this summer!

Experience a 4-week banquet in the form of summer study in Parma, Italy -- one of the few courses in the world devoted to the international law of food, an issue of immense emerging importance.

The course, which will be held in the city considered the European or even the world capital of food, covers food supply, safety, security, subsidies, trade, and a variety of other contemporary issues. Field trips include visits to the European Food Safety Authority in Parma and the UN Food and Agriculture Organization in Rome, as well as a cooking class at a local culinary institute.

Taught by Boston College Law Professor David Wirth, who has extensive academic and practical experience in the field, the course is one of the few in the world devoted to this rapidly-emerging subject matter. The course is also of general interest, covering the fundamentals of international and regulatory law both in the United States and abroad.

There are no prerequisites, and no knowledge of Italian is required.

The application deadline is February 5, 2016. Students who are potentially interested in the program are encouraged to initiate the user-friendly application before that date so as to reserve a place in the course. Credit will be awarded to non-Boston College students, both law students and students in other disciplines, by prior arrangement with the student's home institution.

International Law of Food
May 29-June 26, 2016
University of Parma, Italy
3 credits (45 contact hours)

The course description and on-line application can be found here (<http://www.bc.edu/offices/international/progsummer-new/nonbcsummerapp.html> in case the link is broken). For more information e-mail Professor Wirth at david.wirth@bc.edu and/or Brian Fleming, a student in the course when it was previously taught, at brian.fleming26@gmail.com.

###